Evaluation day I knew it was coming and dreading it. I know some truth would be revealed about my flaws. It is so hard to embrace my flaws I need to look at my flaws as an opportunity to grow and learn. Not as criticism. I also need to look at the one who is judging me and do they have and use good judgement. I feared evaluation because I knew there was retaliation from my experience with Bob. He did not deserve to judge me. His example was of everything not to do. Making fun of everyone, no exceptions! If it wasn't to your face it was behind your back. But seldom came good things from his lips about another. Unless, they were in cohorts with his secrets, or kissing his butt. But even then you were usually tormented with verbal assaults even more. I guess that was a sign he liked you. Hypocrite! Today I feel beat up. Pushed down. Broken as I am sure that is how they wanted me to feel. Who ever they are. When Keith went to give me my evaluation one page was missing. He had to pull it out of the garbage to give it to me. I do not feel Keith agreed with the agenda nor do I think he liked doing it. Bob sat right outside the door so he could hear as much as he could. When it was time to receive Bob's evaluation it was handed to me by Keith. When I got to the end of Bob's evaluation it was not there in its entirety and up till now I do not know what it says. I told Keith I would focus on Keith's evaluation because he was my future. I told him Bob's had no validity to me there was a lack of communication and a misunderstanding. The point of the evaluation? Not sure to document my wrong doings for further action or a spanking for standing up and voicing my opinion.

I was handed zone 18 towards the end of July 07. It is protocol for a tech to be taken to each source and to go through the cards to be shown the area. This was not done for me. Quite a lot of my source cards were missing maps and sources were not updated. Also many new cards needed to be made because they were problem areas and were not documented. Usually a set of keys are given for access. I asked my supervisor Keith
